CEU Session II

Making Space for Innovation 0.1 CEU

This presentation focuses on a business case for creativity and innovation. Also covered is research and scientific evidence that suggests the physical built environment can be an important component in enhancing cognitive performance in the workplace.

Herman Miller CEU Presenter: Cindy Donn

CEU Session III

How do you design for a workforce that spans four generations? 0.1 CEU

Two major forces affecting design today are culture and technology. In this session, participants will explore the characteristics of each generation and the effect on both the emotional health of individuals and the organizational welfare of those who share one work environment. The presenter will discuss the latest trends as they relate to speed, display and visual characteristics in our environment and how these elements affect the broad range of generations in today's workforce. Attendees will leave with a better understanding of the convergence phenomenon and how to use this information to leverage the design of space to promote positive relationships among the generations.

ASID CEU REQUIREMENTS

RICHMOND DESIGN EXPO

Overview

In April, a new membership bylaw was enacted by the ASID Board of Directors which requires practitioner members of ASID to engage in regular, ongoing continuing education. This new member requirement strengthens the interior design profession by improving individual attitudes, competencies, knowledge and skills in subject areas essential to the growth and success of the industry.

6 Hours Every Two Years

Practitioner members of the Society are required to complete 6 contact hours of continuing education coursework (equal to 0.6 CEUs) every two years. To qualify, coursework must be taken from an approved provider.

Biyearly Self-Reporting

Practitioner members of the Society will certify compliance through an online self-reporting mechanism. The first two-year reporting period will begin on January 1, 2008, with 0.6 CEUs due before December 31, 2009. The second two-year reporting period will begin on January 1, 2010, and so on. Online self-reporting begins January 2008.

Random Audits

All members who fail to self-report their compliance with the policy will be automatically audited. Additionally, approximately 3 percent of members will be randomly selected for audit during each reporting period.

Failure to Comply

Any member who fails to comply with the continuing education requirements will be subject to a termination of Society membership in accordance with the requirements of the policy.
