Orgill, Inc. Announces Plans to Grow Distribution Network With the Addition of Idaho Facility

MEMPHIS -- Orgill, Inc., the world's largest independent hardlines distributor, will be expanding its network of world-class distribution facilities with the addition of an approximately half-million-square-foot distribution center in Post Falls, Idaho.

Orgill has signed an agreement to acquire the facility and is expecting to close on the purchase September 1.

The new facility will be Orgill's seventh full-service distribution center, in addition to locations currently operating in Tifton, Georgia; Inwood, West Virginia; Sikeston, Missouri; Hurricane, Utah; Kilgore, Texas; and London, Ontario.

"We are excited to announce this expansion to our distribution network and look forward to the enhanced efficiencies this will create for our customers as we move forward," says Ron Beal, Orgill's chairman, president and CEO.

The primary reason for the addition of the new Post Falls facility was to provide faster and more efficient service to Orgill's growing customer base. The new facility will service Canadian customers in British Columbia and Alberta as well as customers in five states throughout the Northwest U.S. including Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Alaska.

These customers had previously been served out of other Orgill distribution centers but the addition of the new facility will streamline the delivery process.

"Orgill's investment in this distribution center will further enhance our ability to provide retailers with access to all the products, programs and services they need to compete effectively," says Brett Hammers, Orgill's Chief Operating Officer.

According to Randy Williams, Orgill's General Manager of Distribution, by operating from the Post Falls facility, Orgill will be able to provide much better delivery and service in Western Canada, resulting in reduced lead time into major areas such as Vancouver and Calgary.

Following the completion of the purchase, Orgill will begin retrofitting the facility and expects to be shipping to customers in Canada by February 1, 2017.
