AATA Adds Signature to Advancing the Arts to Support National Policy Priorities

AATA

The American Art Therapy Association (AATA) recently joined with 65 other national organizations to back the statement, Advancing the Arts to Support National Policy Priorities. The statement, now available to the public, urges the new Administration to leverage the arts to their full potential by identifying and raising their visibility in policy issues that cut across federal agencies, including economic and community development, health and wellness, veteran and active duty military care, education and youth development, international diplomacy and cultural exchange, and technology and communications policy.

Campaign for Hope: Florida Art Therapy Association Expands Art from the Heart

Joseph Scarce, MA, MFT, ATR-BC, President of the Florida Art Therapy Association

On Friday, Sept. 15, the Orlando Youth Alliance enjoyed expressing themselves and creating art in the heart with a message of sympathy and hope for the Orlando families and community affected by the Pulse nightclub tragedy. The youth attendees participated by creating their own art and sharing their art making with each other. Art therapy will continue with this group, as one of the art therapists in attendance agreed to facilitate the OYA group. The event offered a wonderful opportunity for the youth to continue expressing themselves through art making. READ MORE

Katharine Houpt, MAAT, ATR, LCPC is an artist and art therapist in Chicago. She owns a private practice, working with adults in an art studio space and individuals living with Alzheimer's and related forms of dementia in their homes, as well as providing art-based supervision for professionals seeking ATR and LCPC certification and licensure. A member of both the AATA and the Illinois Art Therapy Association (IATA), Katharine values the opportunity for networking, learning and self-care that national and local events provide. "The conferences are a great chance to be inspired by not only what is there," she notes, "but what gaps need to be filled to make our profession stronger." READ MORE

Call for artwork extended

AATA

The AATA, in partnership with Dover Publications, Inc., is creating a coloring book that will help raise public awareness of the art therapy profession. It will be illustrated solely by AATA credentialed professional members, showcasing their talent while providing their unique perspectives on the benefits of art therapy. Importantly, this book will promote an accurate and consistent message of art therapy as a regulated mental health profession, because the AATA will oversee written content included in the book, including the title and introduction, and ensure all content is relevant to the AATA's mission and vision. Furthermore, the contributing artists may promote their own products/services that can be included in conjunction with their coloring page and narrative. READ

Art therapy helps veterans communicate feelings and emotions

WTMJ-TV

Veterans with mental illness or PTSD may struggle to express their feelings. For one local Vietnam veteran, the solution is a canvas and paintbrush. Willie Weaver-Bey spent 40 years in prison after serving in the Army. When he got out, he struggled to reconnect with the outside world, but through color and paint, he found a way to share his life experiences. READ MORE

Art therapy studio opens in Hanover, Pennsylvania

The Evening Sun

When someone experiences trauma, therapy is often suggested as a helpful tool to begin the healing process. But what about when people do not have the words to express their feelings? Brenda Cunningham, a state licensed and certified art therapist, understands the importance of non-verbal communication. "Talk therapy is a point-blank conversation about the mental health issue that you're dealing with, whereas art therapy might not be so direct," Cunningham said. "It's very indirect, like a back door. It deals with different parts of the brain other than language." READ MORE
