Update on the New York State Approval of the American Art Therapy Association as a Provider of Continuing Education

Barbara Florence, Director, Events & Education

Here is an update to the announcement we made in December 2016 regarding the State of New York's revision of its continuing education procedures for Licensed Creative Arts Therapists (LCATs). As previously communicated, AATA was accepted by New York State as an approved provider. This means that we will be offering "live" educational sessions at our annual conference to be held on November 8-12, 2017*, in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Through our online Institute for Continuing Education in Art Therapy (ICE/AT) we will offer "self-study" courses that meet the State of New York requirements. READ MORE

Final rule enhances protections for research participants, modernizes oversight system

U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and 15 other federal agencies issued a final rule to update regulations that safeguard individuals who participate in research. Most provisions in the new rule will go into effect in 2018. The new rule strengthens protections for people who volunteer to participate in research, while ensuring that the oversight system does not add inappropriate administrative burdens, particularly to low-risk research. It also allows more flexibility in keeping with today's dynamic research environment. READ MORE

Could participating in the arts lower your stress?

WFPL-FM

In August, the National Endowment for the Arts released data that estimated annual state-level arts participation from the years 2012-2015. In Kentucky, this study didn't make too much of a splash because across the board, when compared to other states, we didn't do too badly. We were solidly average when compared to national statistics regarding attending arts events, reading literature and consuming arts via electronic media. READ MORE

Art therapy helps reduce pain, anxiety for woman diagnosed with breast cancer

WITI-TV

Art is more than beautiful — it can be therapeutic. Studies show art therapy can reduce pain and anxiety in cancer patients. And one local woman who, despite a devastating diagnosis, learned things about herself over the course of her healing. Gloria Boileau is a professional speaker and published author. Her life in California got put on hold when her mom here in Milwaukee needed a caretaker. READ MORE
