

Save Time with Electronic Prescribing

Robert McDermott, CEO and President / iCoreConnect

Have you considered the literal monetary cost of time consumed by you, your staff and your patients when prescribing with the same old prescription pad, phone or fax? There are calls to and from pharmacies, plus time spent looking up drug information on websites or in reference books. Faxing isn't always secure or compliant. Patients may leave the appointment without their prescription. Adherence drops when a patient feels inconvenienced when dropping off or waiting to pick up prescriptions. The list goes on.

Every minute spent by you and your team can be calculated into a direct cost based on wages alone. However, when you consider second and third-order effects of interrupted workflow, the indirect costs grow even greater. Add these costs on top of the dangers of unintended interactions (or undetected prescription abuse) and the weight of the paper system really starts to show itself.

Patient adherence, practice protection and workflow speed are key benefits to electronic prescribing, or e-Prescribing. As you make the switch to a more productive way of working, consider these functions when evaluating e-Prescribing software.

Prescribe on Your Office Computers, Laptop, Tablet or Phone

A truly comprehensive cloud e-Prescribing solution allows you to e-Prescribe from desktops and laptops, at no additional cost, from any location, any time.

Integrate with Your Practice Management System (PM)

With true integration, your practice management system populates your patient's information directly from your PM into your e-Prescribing software, eliminating duplicate work.

Single-Click Access to the Oregon Prescription Drug Monitoring Program (PDMP)

The national average duration to access a state PDMP website is more than four minutes and 50 clicks. Compare that to a comprehensive e-Prescribing cloud software that is properly integrated to your PM and gets you there in one or two clicks.

This is by no means a full list of beneficial features but it does shed light on opportunities to speed up your workflow, protect your patients and improve profit through productivity.
