Work Safe for Life

Construction leaders understand that they must continually update their approach to support a safety culture. Our annual Leadership Day provides you with the information you need to navigate the changing safety climate, and to effectively manage your safety program.

This year, we will be addressing the important questions such as "How can COR support your safety program?" and "How will the Ministry of Labour recognise COR certification in the employer accreditation program?" Furthermore, we will be examining which buyers will now require COR certification, and the changing of safety expectations.

Lynda Robson of The Institute for Work and Health will present on an extensive study and evaluation of the Working at Heights Regulations and Training mandate created over the last three years, and will discuss its implications.

Additionally, we have MPP Jane McKenna joining us and to provide an update on the new government's direction and initiatives. Chief Prevention Officer Ron Kelusky will also provide an update and discuss opportunities for the construction industry.

Rob Ellis and members of the continuously expanding League of Champions will welcome new members and celebrate the progress made in supporting safety among students and younger workers, and the building of a safety culture in the construction industry.

We encourage construction leaders and their safety professionals to join us and participate on March 1st
